

Plaintiff and Defense Perspective on:
Class Action Waivers After The U.S. Supreme Court Decision In *AT&T v. Concepcion

By Shannon Petersen, Esq. and Alan Mansfield, Esq.

On April 27, 2011, the U.S. Supreme Court held in AT&T v. Concepcion that the Federal Arbitration Act "preempts California's rule classifying most collective arbitration waivers in consumer contracts as unconscionable."¹ The Court referred to this rule as the "Discover Bank rule," after Discover Bank v. Superior Court.² In Concepcion, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed a trial court's finding, based on Discover Bank, that a class action waiver in a form arbitration agreement was unconscionable because 1) the contract was a contract of adhesion, 2) the damages at issue were small (averaging $30 per class member), and 3) the plaintiff alleged a scheme to cheat consumers out of small sums of money.

The U.S. Supreme Court reversed. Writing for a 5-4 majority (Justice Thomas wrote a concurrence), Justice Scalia concluded state laws that undermine the enforceability of class action waivers in consumer arbitration agreements improperly obstruct the FAA. The following is a defense and plaintiff perspective on the impact of Concepcion.

Discover Bank* Is Dead: A View From The Defense

Shannon Petersen, Esq.

C*oncepcion* fundamentally alters the law in California and elsewhere. In addition to Discover Bank, the Court's decision also necessarily overturns a host of California cases limiting the enforceability of class action waivers and restricting arbitration agreements on public policy grounds. While the Court's decision applies only to arbitration agreements written under the FAA, it is only a matter of time before

(see "Concepcion: Defense" on page 5)

The Sky Is Not Falling: A Plaintiff's Perspective

Public interest groups, business associations and plaintiffs' attorneys have either rejoiced or lamented, depending on their point of view, how Concepcion either protects businesses from predatory lawsuits or makes it impossible for consumers to obtain redress from predatory practices. While Concepcion holds it is a violation of the FAA to find an arbitration clause with a class action waiver provision in certain types of Alan M. Mansfield, Esq.

(see "Concepcion: Plaintiff" on page 6)

Concepcion: Defense

continued from page 1

form contracts across the country are re-written to provide for arbitration under the FAA and thus benefit from this decision.

According to the Court, the “overarching purpose” of the FAA “is to ensure the enforcement of arbitration agreements according to their terms so as to facilitate streamlined proceedings.”³ This purpose trumps any state law designed to protect class action rights. The Court was unpersuaded by the rationale of Discover Bank that enforcing class action waivers in cases involving small sums of money will essentially kill such claims. As the dissent argued: “The realistic alternative to a class action is not 17 million individual suits, but zero individual suits, as only a lunatic or a fanatic sues for $30.”⁴ The majority was untroubled: “The dissent claims that class proceedings are necessary to prosecute small-dollar claims that might otherwise slip through the legal system. But States cannot require a procedure that is inconsistent with the FAA, even if it is desirable for unrelated reasons.”⁵

As Justice Thomas explained in his concurring opinion, “Contract defenses unrelated to the making of an agreement—such as public policy—could not be the basis for declining to enforce an arbitration clause.”⁶

Under Concepcion, many other seminal California cases refusing to enforce arbitration clauses now share Discover Bank’s death, including Gentry v. Superior Court,⁷ Cruz v. Pacific Health Systems, Inc.,⁸ Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans,⁹ and Fisher v. DCH Temecula Imports LLC,¹⁰ among others.

In Gentry, the California Supreme Court held that in most cases an arbitration clause cannot be used to waive a statutory right. In Fisher, the court relied on Gentry and held that there is an unwaivable statutory right to a class action under the Consumers Legal Remedies Act (the CLRA). Both decisions are grounded in state public policy favoring class actions rights over a parties’ agreement. Both are now out the window in light of Concepcion.

Similarly, in Broughton and Cruz, the

(see “Concepcion: Defense” on page 6)

CAPTURING IT ALL

Court Reporting

Interactive Realtime

Legal Videography

Interpreting

Transcription

Video Conferencing

Realtime/Video Streaming

Case Management

Online Scheduling

701 B Street | Suite 228 | San Diego, CA 92101 | 619.546.9151 | aptusCR.com

aptus
COURT REPORTING

Concepcion: Defense

continued from page 5

California Supreme Court held that claims for a public injunction under the CLRA and the Unfair Competition Law (the UCL) are not subject to arbitration. The Court in Concepcion rejected this approach as well. "When state law prohibits outright the arbitration of a particular type of claim, the analysis is straightforward: The conflicting rule is displaced by the FAA."¹¹

Plaintiffs will try to work around Concepcion, but they have little room to maneuver. Though the FAA does not preempt "generally applicable contract defenses" such as fraud, duress, or unconscionability, a plaintiff can no longer argue that the class action waiver itself is unconscionable. Plaintiffs will continue to argue procedural unconscionability, but the Supreme Court did not think much of this argument either, holding that "the times in which consumer contracts were anything other than adhesive are long past."¹² Non-negotiable form contracts remain enforceable. For plaintiffs' class action counsel, the sky is indeed falling. ▲

ASSOCIATION OF BUSINESS TRIAL LAWYERS
SAN DIEGO

abtl

The views and opinions expressed in this newsletter are solely those of the authors. While these materials are intended to provide accurate and authoritative information in regard to the subject matter covered, they are designed for educational and informational purposes only. Nothing contained herein is to be construed as the rendering of legal advice for specific cases, and readers are responsible for obtaining such advice from their own legal counsel.

Use of these materials does not create an attorney-client relationship between the user and the author.

Editor: Lois M. Kosch

(619) 236-9600

lkosch@wilsonturnerkosmo.com

Editorial Board:

Eric Bliss, Richard Gluck, Alan Mansfield,
Olga May and Shannon Petersen

©2011 Association of Business Trial Lawyers-San Diego.
All rights reserved.

Concepcion: Plaintiff

continued from page 1

arbitration clauses per se unconscionable, as the dissent observed, the California Supreme Court had already held as much in Discover Bank: "[c]lass action and arbitration waivers are not, in the abstract, exculpatory clauses . . . We do not hold that all class action waivers are necessarily unconscionable."¹³ Thus, the U.S. Supreme Court may have only overruled that which the California Supreme Court did not say.

The U.S. Supreme Court's ruling is also limited in that it focused primarily on attacking class action arbitrations under the FAA, not class action waivers generally. The Court conceded if such a clause had other unconscionable elements or defenses that did not apply only to arbitration, such a clause could be stricken without offending the FAA under its savings clause, which "permits agreements to arbitrate to be invalidated by generally applicable contract defenses, such as fraud, duress, or unconscionability."¹⁴ Concepcion leaves open whether a class action waiver provision in a non-interstate commerce case, or when combined with other unconscionable elements or defenses that are not solely arbitration-related, could still be invalidated.

The Court also recognized that, "Of course States remain free to take steps addressing the concerns that attend contracts of adhesion—for example, requiring class action-waiver provisions in adhesive arbitration agreements to be highlighted."¹⁵ While this may be an avenue of pursuit in some cases, Defendants will counter that this only applies to laws created by legislation, and not judges, and that any such law cannot interfere with arbitration. Defendants will also argue that this footnote must be reconciled with the Court's own precedent in Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto,¹⁶ holding that the FAA preempted a Montana statute requiring all contracts containing arbitration provisions to provide notice of such on the first page in underlined and capitalized letters.

The U. S. Supreme Court also did not address a number of other key issues. For example, despite the defense's claim to the contrary, Concepcion does not alter the rule of Broughton or Cruz that claims for injunctions under the CLRA